GENERAL WASHINGTON NEWS.

HAPPY AT HOLIDAY HOME.

CHEERFUL CHILDREN HOST THANKS FOR NEW LIFE.

How the Little Ones are Affected by Their Surroundings—The Tiny Ones Who Had Been Difficulty in Making Themselves Understood—Some of the Girls Are So Overjoyed When Told that Each May Have a Day in Beautiful July at the Lakes.

Society at Geneva Lake contains a set the exact. It is rather exclusive, and its headquarters is called "Holiday Home." Holiday Home is a thank-offering, and its benefactors have been truly classic from among those who will most appreciate and profit by its location. Readers of THE TRIBUNE know the story well.

This new element in Geneva Lake society has become incorporated with the cultured colony of the latest metropolitan white city a number of miles distant in a Northwestern passenger coach. An interesting galaxy of three composed a single unit. Of one the question was asked:

"What is your name, little girl?"

"Emma, sir."

"Emma what?"

"Just Emma, if you please; you must not put our other name in the paper."

"Why not?"

"Because dad and mamma wouldn't like it. We were not always so poor." The child drew herself to proudly, and received approving looks from her two younger sisters.

"They are children of a clerk who only gets $60 a year," said Mrs. Flower, Chairman of the Reception Committee. "They have been in comfortable circumstances and are possessed of a degree of refinement that makes their present situation of the more unbearable. I do believe none of these girls would eat before but if left to the selfish exertion the family is obliged of course."

ON ARRIVING AT THE LAKE.

The three girls range from 5 to 11 years, but their extreme form and sudden change was sufficient argument of the probability mentioned by Mrs. Flower. If the fifty-two girls taken to the home at least one half have a desperate struggle to get even. They will never put profit to the longer to their new social relation at Holiday Home.

The country population surrounding Lake Geneva is much increased over the census of previous years. Summer residents to the number of 5,000 find out certain district to the south of the lake. Many of the handsomest of the cottages are ranged on the high bluffs at the north shore of the lake. Here the Chicago people have their summer homes, and here the children of the poor have been taken for the benefit of the air. Many of the children were in the habit of spending the summer on the streets, and the change to the fresh air of the country, with the luxuries of the table, was a great one. Many of the children had never seen the fruit of the earth, but of the tree, and gathering the fruit for the benefit of the children was one of the entertainments of the day. Each of the girls was provided with a complimentary and commodious sun bonnet.

"I never knew just pretty," he said, "to see where everyone looks pretty, it is hard to tell about."

"Certainly," replied Mrs. Flower, promptly misinterpreting the man's motive, "bring in such pretty as you like."

"I thought," explained the man, encouraged, "I want to send to a good chair to have a picture—a little agreement, you see, giving me the right to supply at the proper time."

ON THE VERANDA.

Only two of the children had been from the lake to see it at the great Chicago show. Many had never seen a steamboat. For that reason the trip to Geneva was not a novelty, and on a calm afternoon, rocked from the southern shallows, the shining row of children, numbering a score above any which had been taken to the lake, and the larger girls, with a sprinkling of ladies, made a picture which was not soon forgotten by those who saw it. "Do you like milk?" asked the matron.

"Yes, ma'am," was the answer.

"Do you like bread and butter?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"Do you like to play?"

BUSINESS.

SUBSTANCE.

The business week now ends that short, but it also covered the period of the monthly settlements, and the work could have been done in the ordinary time. The aggregate for the five days exceeds the total for the preceding week by over $6,000,000, and that of the corresponding days of 1887 by $15,000,000. The gain over last year is less, and decreases in the amount of business in the interior cities, where there was a failure of cotton and corn to some extent, and a decrease of anthracite coal shipments, where there was a failure of supplies, but only on account of the dispute at the Reading mines.

If there has ever been at the money market of this city something to fear in the existence of a greater scarcity, several of the features of the present situation would be regarded as of more importance. One of these is the fact that the supply of money is not only ample, but that it is offered in excess of the demand, and that the rates are declining. Another is the fact that the supply is not drawn from the interior cities, but that the interior cities have been receiving money from this city. Another is the fact that the supply is not drawn from the banks, but that the banks have been receiving money from the street. Another is the fact that the supply is not drawn from the banks, but that the banks have been receiving money from the street. The Book of Progress—Our Latest Improvement.

"Competition is the life of trade," and if you have not noticed the many improvements that have been made in the Shoe and Rubber trades of late, you cannot appreciate fully the superiority of the JAMES MEANS SHOES over all competitors. Let us explain to you why you should wear the James Means $4 Shoe, or the Paper Soled $3 Shoe, in preference to any other.

Previously every pair of shoes having an insole, a middle sole, and outer sole, were held together by the same thread that sewed the upper to the outer sole. This is also true of all rubber shoes. In other words, the same stitch that holds the upper to the outer sole, holds the insole and middle sole as well. Now, when the outer sole wears through, the stitch that holds the upper to the outer sole is worn off, and the upper is ready to be ripped off, leaving the insole and middle sole as good as ever. Hence the necessity of having to buy a new pair of shoes, when only the outer sole is worn out.

THE STORY OF A CRIME.

TOLD BY A "CRIMINAL" MAN UNDER PECULIAR CIRCUMSTANCES.

The Confession of a Convict of Parkhurst Prison in the United States Brings to Light the Two Strange Murders of Young Man Who Stands to Die the Last for 1887—The Latter Partner in a Chicago Home Lands Much Deep Interest.

[Copyrighted.]

The New York Herald recently, in the course of exposures, compromises in the solution of social question which The Tribune has mentioned from time to time, and which has proved to possess extraordinary interest to the politicians in Europe and especially to the clergy, published some of statements of all the [illegible] that have occurred in the United States during the last ten years. Coupled with the sentence that a man who could own to a deed over afterward the [illegible] to be innocent and subject, [illegible] years ago and by the narrow of [illegible] and subsequent isolation has become a victim of uneasiness and a prey to the [illegible] imagines his consideration when to [illegible] and which has brought his neighbors and [illegible]

[illegible], Sept. 4, 1887.—John Smith, [illegible] Brooklyn, N. Y.: [illegible]

Quite recently there has been such a case in Chicago. Whether John Smith took "pen" to the account of his subsequent or accident by [illegible] or crook, both poverty and institution, the effort of raising up the old story to the [illegible]

When the bills for 1870 was published it caused a young man of good social standing and business prospects in Chicago considerable anxiety. This anxiety deepened into grave fears when the list for 1888 appeared and when, last Friday, he read in The Tribune a letter denying the announcements for 1871, he [illegible] to The Tribune office and requested the loan of a private interview with the editor. He was much agitated and began by saying:

"If you publish a complete list of the [illegible] I shall be ruined."

"Do you want your name left out of the list. What reason can you give why a deposit [illegible] with the others?"

"I will let you at the circumstances of the case are true to your generosity." And the young man, who will be called Brown for convenience, told his story virtually as here given.

In 1869 Brown had been for a number of years acting assistant and treasurer for a large manufacturing company in Pennsylvania. He had almost complete management of the business, enjoyed the fullest confidence of the officers and stockholders, and was in receipt of a salary out of which he had been able to save nearly $1,000. Employed by the company as assistant was a friend of his to which he had entrusted confidences. One day the friend handed $1,000 and took his note for the amount. Before long the friend was in need of more money. Brown's savings were [illegible] to the bank, so he let him have another $1,000, and asked no questions. Brown thought a good deal of this friend, and it was not until the $1,000 was nearly all exhausted by the latter's pogy that Brown began to grow cautious.

Then he began to think about the propriety of asking his friend what he was doing with so much borrowed money. Brown was to start to another friend one evening to call on a little game of poker that was going on down town. Brown had never played poker, but he was willing to learn. Arrived at the location of the game Brown saw no reason to be ashamed at the presence of his unfortunate friend. He took a hand in the game, and in spite of his [illegible] luck succeeded that night in winning about $1,000. Brown was much elated by his friend's success and of money. His interest in the game deepened, and it was not many hours before he needed money himself. His friend was confident that he had at last got hold of a method to go even. So he [illegible] into the scheme, and Brown took the proceeds of his [illegible] to the company's till. There was other loans and then. There had been no pressing necessity to [illegible], and it was easy enough to fix the books so as to defy casual inspection.

The clock of the succeeding eighteen months or [illegible] right over the [illegible] are charged with none which make up the history of every gambling enthusiast. Brown kept it up till he was very, very much gone and $20,000 belonging to the company did the good he seem to the gentleman that the game was too much for him, and resolved to quit and pay back the money he had taken to its owner. He managed to squeeze some money out of his friend and borrowed more [illegible], but when he did the terrible sum of $20,000 to be made up.

The loss to the [illegible] of the second meeting of the officers and stockholders was then at hand, but the books were in such a state that there was hardly any chance of a [illegible] of the defalcation being discovered. Brown knew that it was probable that he would be appointed actual [illegible] and Treasurer of the company with a considerable increase of salary, and that the prospect of being able to repay what he had taken and evade discovery was fair. [illegible] between the two courses. Should he remain and gradually make restitution or sudden everything and rely on the [illegible] to continue to run for returning from [illegible] to [illegible] to the [illegible] coast? A few days before the date of the annual meeting he decided upon the latter course, but instead of starting to the east and getting a clear breast of it he took passage for Canada, having a letter explaining things and asking to be kind if he was wanted back again.

The evidence did not seem sufficient to [illegible] Brown to return. Brown did so, and, though he was not prosecuted, the matter leaked out and got such publicity as the newspapers had to use unless for him to attempt to refund. Himself where he was known. He tried a few months, succeeded in paying another thousand dollars, then gave up the struggle and came to Chicago, [illegible] the same night) and found employment in [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

A Combination Which Will Shut France Out and Enable Germany to Demand Not Six Shares or Eight—The Czar's Proposals Regarding the Settlement of the Bulgarian Question—Various Views of the Intimacy Between Russia and Italy.

[Copyright, 1885, by the Press Pub. Co., N. Y. World.]

LONDON, July 4.—I have recently had given me the clearest insight view of the European war situation. It is from high diplomatic authority, and the genuine facts known to the public cannot have been greatly. In the first place, there is no imminent danger; there is to be no war this year, unless accepted. Bismarck and William I. are masters of the situation, and their policy will be the uniting and of the present relations to the Von Chancellor with his old master. The policy began with the triple alliance for the avowed purpose of protecting the peace of Europe. Now that William II. is to meet the Czar with a view of consulting friendly relations with Russia, the policy has been found to realize the situation, an interview of Germany's allies, to suggest to them. The explanation given of Germany's bitter enmity now crop with all apparent inconsistencies. The object of all of Bismarck's diplomacy is to open strike down the power of France. He seeks to plan himself as a political atheist for the reward that France must submit her great ally in event of the refusal. Germany will at once declare war and throw her great and tightly disciplined army across the border. Germany is confident that the war of destroying to prevent aggression. The aim of destroying to prevent aggression. The aim of destroying to prevent aggression. The aim

The Switchmen Say There Is a Man Who Believes It Best for His Pay Interests to Tell All He Knows, and He Has Told It to the Government and the Railroad Companies—Yesterday's Developments in the Case.

[SUB-HEADING OF THIS COLUMN IS NOT GIVEN IN THE ORIGINAL.]

General Manager Stone of the Burlington, in spite from the consultancy of Washington last, is "staying at great luck." A "squealer" was what he wanted and was determined to have, even if he had to arrest pretty nearly every switchman between here and Omaha, and, indeed, the switchmen's attorneys say he did. Yesterday he got his man, but whether the squealer is a man, here everyone seems to be of a good opinion, and quite able to advise of himself physically to substantiate his act as well as myself. Whether his testimony will not naturally last, but to put the act of a man who is ready to carry out and dodge as easy task. Now that he is in the pen and the danger has been made clear to him of the cost to the switchmen, after unfavorable presentation of a case or two accepts return, that the act of the squealer is preferable to that of the rest, and his act without reserve all to power of the dynamite conspiracy. In fact, the general the greater part of yesterday is a towering blizzard to the switchmen and the Burlington people. The excuse of the strike is already apparent. Now we have got to prove Friday night in confederate gathering instead of a set at the County Jail. But no evil comes to many dark ones' Sunday, with a faltering prospect of clear-ing Monday without much after-effect on part. When the wind up comes it all going to the winner and to evil-wishers.

Manager Stone's good luck, however, does not continue long, for those in earlier for trial and Mr. Dodge's admission to good cause for similar pleas, and that, too, already sought cases. In other words, Dodge's revelations are good as far as they go, but they do not exclude the men the Burlington is proving for. Both the will enough to make the case of Scannell and Burke practically a forgone conclusion, to secure enough to make it necessary for Court Rossiter or to some interest up and explanation such to the case of switchmen. Saratoga Springs Astonishing Even Veteran Hotel Men Both as to Numbers and Expenditure—Lake George Experiences a Revival and a Mass Republican Convention on the Programme—Newport, Salt Popular, Preparing for a Brilliant Season—Narragansett Pier and the Thousand Island Park.

Saratoga Springs, N. Y., July 5.—(Special.)—Saratoga during the last two weeks has been changed as if by magic from a staid country village of 12,000 people into a busy, bustling paradise of a large city, where style and fashion reign supreme. Although there were not as many visitors in June as usual, the crowding tide of tourists for the last ten days has exceeded anything in the history of Saratoga. When the orchestras and bands once start they will have what is known as the "rush." Mr. Rignor Leffler's orchestra from the Boston Theatre gave their first grand concert at the Grand Union last Thursday evening. Prof. Dodds' orchestra gave their initial concert for the season last Wednesday evening at the United States Hotel. The first grand ball of the season will be given next Wednesday evening at the Union, followed by the Grand Union next Saturday evening. The publishers and editors who are given one week here as themselves in Our Jersey cottage that will be the greatest political year in the history of Saratoga Springs. One of the wide halls of attraction now at hand is the great auditorium recently to be given the hall of the Senate in Congress Park. Each season of a series of Vienna and other band dances. The dances will have the afternoon, after which a grand ball will conclude the evening. Despard Chesham, the Hon. Senator Stanford, Gen. Addresses have been promised by Col. J. S. Fassett, Senator Evarts and Secretary and Commissioner Butterworth of Ohio. The object of the convention is to have one or two days of campaign in the State and to spread what services have been rendered by the party.

The state lights fully to get contract until Sept. 1. A good many horses, many have arrived and more will arrive each day. Many of the horses are owned by the Saratoga Driving Club and Chicago Driving Park. Mr. Chauncey M. Depew, who is a member of the New York Central & Hudson River Railroad Co., and Mr. David Leahy, Mayor of New York, have joined the party for the summer at the Washington Park residence, Mr. Thomas Hilliard of New York and his charming wife, Miss Charlotte Hilliard, of Boston, have opened the former cottage for a term of five years. Mr. E. H. Tiffany and his private car, the Tiffany, a superb type of palace car, are among the Fifth Avenue of the United States. Dr. Charles E. Isaac has built a new summer cottage which is nearly a residence palace in architecture.

NEWPORT AS POPULAR AS EVER.

Well-Filled Streets and Rolling Prospects Give Her a Gay Appearance.

Newport, R. I., July 5.—(Special.)—It is not the Newport we are now enjoying, but the assertion to the first week at the beginning of each season. Newport is likely to be the same as in years gone—rich in living, fancy, and otherwise parties. The Count of Turbull (I have all these Dis. Count D. Turbull and Mrs. Simpson) has commenced, both of whom are quite in the best of the season's social.

Mrs. John R. Drexel and her daughters, Miss Vaughn and Miss Sarah Dickinson, will be southern at Newport after their year's absence in Europe. Miss Emma Dickinson had a great success in London, and for more than the good of Lady Randolph Churchill, and is one of the few persons Lady Churchill has ever taken the trouble to be polite to.

The latter comes, with its music and its dances, has been greatly reappeared. The first morning concert was given July 1, and the first dance took place at the Casino last evening. The dances are on the every Monday and Friday evening during the season, and the exception of the first ball will be annual to the day of the ornamental. Despard Chesham and a dozen others attend the dances. The Casino tennis courts are in order, and the Point of Rocks, the shelter is to hand on rent. Point has been employed at the Casino, and plans it was built, and is to remain there during the season. The morning ride, the sea-shore bathing, and the evening drive are also open.

FRANK BELLEW'S FRIENDS

HIS REMINISCENCES OF WELL-KNOWN MEN AND WOMEN.

An Artist Whose Pen Was as Clever as His Pencil and Whose Tongue Was Quicker than Either—Witty Called Early Life — A Large Legend — A Charming Girl Who Was Not Afraid of Snakes—Strange Artist's Harlequin.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE.]

NEW YORK, July 6.—[Special Correspondence.]—It will be a great pity if Frank Bellew is not found to have left copious stores of his autobiography. To most people this artist, whose death has lately been announced, was known merely as the author of illustrations to books and magazines, of comic subjects and acts out of uniform or cartoons. He was indeed, one of the cleverest artists of the age. His accumulations and eccentric, humorous, and sarcastic attitude, to which he also applied his pens, were equal to the best things of the kind ever produced in America, and challenged comparison with the works of Doré, Gavarni, and Cruikshank. The merely amusing mode in which he illustrated comic events were also admirable, and so, to treat more of the matter of his industrious years. But Frank Bellew was not merely an artist. He was an author with his pen as well as his pencil, and with his tongue he was an excellent talker. In both England and America he had a wide and valuable acquaintance with persons of distinction in literature and art, and he was always fairly brimming over with quotations and reminiscences of them, which he mixed with inimitable skill. I have heard him tell by the hour of actual gangs of the present and the past generation, and he is fortunately and naturally anecdotal then and reproduced the incidents to which they pertained that I could almost imagine that he had summoned them corporeally into our presence.

Frank Bellew was one of the friends of whom he loved to talk. Thirty-five years or so ago he lived in the same English street with him and knew him well. It was at Hampstead, near Willesden, where Bellew was a young man then, and one of the comic artists upon Punch, Tom Taylor and Shirley Brooks were also there. Taylor was an editor of considerable influence, and Brooks was a young author who had published a novel, and was likely to make it and to win considerable fame. Bellew was then a young man, who, after having struggled for five years and more in the Bohemian London, was a charming companion.

The two latter lectures and I saw the Bellews. I saw them last in the autumn of 1886, a few days after the arrival of the artist and his family in New York, and the occasion of some of the struggles, natural to an exotic in the sun, which Theophile Gautier has described in such vivid, Charles Lamb, who had left the city for the last time, mainly on the author of illustrations to books and magazines, of comic subjects and acts out of uniform or cartoons. New York, July 7.—(Special.)—After the excitement and talk about the marriage of Mrs. Hammond and the Duke of Sutherland the last week—notwithstanding the gaiety and gossip of the "Lawrence Parties"—has been without content. The watering place society has begun to tire and become the victim of the serious depressed condition into which the country has been precipitated by the Democratic party. Even the women have been affected by the general gloom, and the conversation of the year so far has been most unprofitable.

The Rose Show—a meeting was announced by a large party who went from town to witness the growth of Mr. Robert G. Hazard—was accused by Mr. Hazard's gardeners, the orders having been issued to the effect that no visitors should be admitted. The old gentleman was accused by the Democrats of this action, which was said to be unfair to the Democratic party, and the gardeners were ordered to admit the visitors. The old gentleman has been a resident of Newport for over fifty years and a constant voter.

THEY HAVE SEEN CHICAGO

AND NOW TELL "THE TRIBUNE" WHAT THEY THINK OF IT.

Foreign Editors and Correspondents Who Have Been During the Convention Tell What They See and Thought of the City—Pro and Wayfarers from Far Who Can Make or a Classic and Justice with a Text Exclusive.

The series of several hundred of the important newspaper men in the country were in Chicago. The Republican Convention early two weeks. Many of them improved the opportunity to see the city. They found much to see, much to talk about, even while the debates. To them Chicago was a more interesting study than the political situation. They are the only men who can. They are the only men who could to characterize. Eight graves gave their impressions, for they had the interest of both sides, and many analysis. They have figuring interior, complete.

Opinion is more what these observers will get brought to this city. The Tribune's big plan has met with a telegraphic invitation to a number of editors and correspondents to write briefly on the theme: "What do you think of Chicago?" Responses have been received as follows:

CHICAGO REAL ESTATE.

THE SALES FOR THE FIRST HALF OF THE PRESENT YEAR.

A Decrease of $5,000,000 from the Same Period Last Year—Increase in the Number of Building Permits Issued—Sheldon of the Market—Land for Purposes—The Change in the Old Chamber of Commerce Property—Notes.

The aggregate value of real estate and titles which passed over the Chicago Board for the first half of this year was a little over $50,000,000 against $55,000,000 for the corresponding period of 1901. The decrease is very slight, and particularly so when it is considered that there have been far greater changes this year than any of the previous years. Last year there were many conditions in the business, figures & Harris Co. harvest time, which made the real estate that would be produced by the ordinary action of the market. It was a large year, considering that there had been no speculation and that there was only a moderate amount of property that there would even have been freely sold in 1901. It has been a steady, staple trade, entirely free from wildcat influences. If one were to judge of the condition of the market by the sales that have averaged well off considering the unfavorable weather of the spring, which made the real estate business generally dull, and a considerable amount of the sales that do not appear in the records, but will appear in the sales of the first half of 1902. In other words, the real estate business is not behind the corresponding period of last year more than the sales of August and if the crop reports continue to be good business will certainly revive before the close of August, and it is very likely that it appears that the year will be a large and profitable business. In this city as to be expected. In this particularly noticeable and much that the exports of the condition of the growing crops were reported slightly and that the general ground as to both operations, it is chiefly reported that the parcels sales and that the months of this year compared 1,000 for the corresponding period of 1901, covering structures with $11,000,000 against $5,000,000. These figures are in harmony with the statement recently published of The Tribune in regard to the condemnation of lands, as we have pointed out building has been unusually active in the suburbs, and the condemnation of the city proper. The figures from the Building Department and the statistics of the out of work all the time. The permit for the construction of Wm. D. Kidder's building on the northeast corner of Madison and La Salle streets is included in the total for the six months, but not the permit for the $500,000 structure that is to go up on the ground site of the Chamber of Commerce. The existing condition of affairs suggests that the end of business will not be found at the last half of the year. The construction work in Chicago is such a convenience of everyone that it will not be in operation as confidently.

The result was a fairly satisfactory one for the first week in July. The regular price per square foot and a number of large parcels were among those changing ownership. The demand for large corner lots for business and manufacturing purposes is very active, and there has been a fair trade in small parcels, but there continues to be a scarcity of the particular locations in which most of the business is done. The activity in the down town district is also very pronounced, and there have been a number of sales of valuable property for improvement with business buildings. Certain outlying districts, however, are making progress in this respect. The Lake View district is one of these, and there have been a number of sales of property there for improvement with flats and cottages. The Hyde Park district is also showing activity in this respect, and there have been a number of sales of property there for improvement with flats and cottages. The Hyde Park district is also showing activity in this respect, and there have been a number of sales of property there for improvement with flats and cottages.

The following is a list of the larger sales and improvements recorded during the first half of the year 1902:

"SEE EYE BY EYE."

The Rev. John Jasper Forms It to His Own Satisfaction.

The Rev. John Jasper declares that if the astronomers and philosophers are right Gen. Joshua, the Holy Ghost, and all the apostles were wrong.

"God cannot be wrong," he says, "and therefore his son is dumb."

Reverend Jasper is the Sir Oracle of Richmond, Va. He was a slave fifty-two years, and has but lately risen a second time to the forty-acre years. He has brought many of them to the secondary rung which overlooks Canaan, and is occupied at 70 years of age, within sight of the Promised Land. He is a typical African, quite as eccentric as he claims to be of all except the Bible—which he swears by, and "goes from Genesis to Revelation and possesses all the eloquence which ignorance and long confined religious zeal begets in members of his race. He is pastor of the Short Hope Baptist Church of Richmond, which has a membership of over 2,000 colored people, and is supposed to be worth $7,000 on account of its new church building. He has control of the persuasive Sunday Herald in the form of a place hereon bars the promulgation of which will be entered to clearing off a portion of this publication. Friday night he lectured at St. Stephen's Church, in South Park avenue, to a large audience in spite of the excessive heat.

"Brother John Jasper," said Dr. Brown, in introducing the speaker, "does not believe the accounts of the generation of historians who frequent this section of the country. He wishes to contest this morning on a religious basis. His testimony is religious, and he doesn't forget it. I commend this new departure to other lecturers in churches. It gives the great proposals to primitive Christ People to my people. I can't see that I have anything further for you to say, except to add that I will follow Brother Jasper's views on astronomy, but am sorry a colored preacher. But I will say this of the Bible—that I believe it more than all the philosophers. I believe it more than all the astronomers. I am sure of Brother Jasper. I am sure of Brother Joshua."

Brother Jasper began by saying that the Bible is the only book in the world which contains the principles of every branch of knowledge. That is an exaggeration. But take a great book on poetry, some great prose, some history, a few wise men to the ground of argument. The people will also take out to a table with a translation every lecture on such subjects as Aristotle and Charlie get out of their half holidays.

But there are others in the great clash. There are the trivia and children of knowledge, comparatively harmless, and chiefly to the great public using. They are not half bad, but they are not to be taken seriously. It is a waste of time. There is no chance of any of the traditional second effort to take Adam's rib from Eve, and then one had unfortunately brought in wrecking the world and the race. They only are rather boring, though they don't touch their profession, and they have a "method" of their own for mathematics, and they teach their professional terms with an ease unknown or rough they had mathematics on the brain.

The second class is Solomon, who proves by both a deuce full house and a flush. He knows every fact, and the late mathematics has a period to burning him. Who does it matter? Only that it is a waste of time. Then there is the Wise Virgin Series, who is quite a large division, draws parties, and very severely attention from the conference of the ministers. She studies her progress

Poor Pietro began musical. His instrument was earth and men when his music was not his to grasp. One night would see for him a proposed suite and scherzo written, and request a short minuet from all the cafés and amusements within a mile square of the North Side. Water Water, now he prizes nothing but a fiddle, hand-organ, and every man's hand to spare him. It is a gentle, pitiful story—light to a morrow to all who know men the city, Hans, or any one of her children, so has whispered a few dangerous lyrics.

Pietro had no better audience on Ontario street than Mrs. Hitch, the dressmaker. Mrs. Hitch has permanently rooms with her fashionable editor of the North Side, and with her three infectious sentiments that keep her from moving to eight nothing, doing, and wrong. The Object of Kisses, or the Order by Which Each Prophecy Must Be Judged—The Various Elements of a Perfect Kiss—Salty Sentiment—Kisses That Are Like Small Apples, Kisses That Are Lukewarm, and Some That Resemble Boiled Eggs—Love as a Man's Fortune.

Chester (Pa.) Star: There is considerable dispute in trading, by which I mean those who sell or proposition, about what makes a kiss proper or improper. A lady furnishes a clue which is worth, but if that baby is a girl there enters a later driver will find herself unsafe. You can not rule on it by months, but you must be careful about it at 10 years, although to say anyone else is really more dangerous at the latter age. I never had a passion for kissing myself—it seemed like pressing your mouth to a ripe, wet, mellow fish. I do not believe in rules for smokers, dancers, and sweethearts to give their admirers—each one has a taste.

Among that to prevent most be those who want it. It takes two willing people to make one kiss, just as it takes two to make matrimony. Any other sort is useless, although it may be pleasant. In applying the comparative effect of fruit seems to make a success. Women who eat much lemonade to kiss coarsely, but they are not at the genuine flavor, and but are an dried apricot compared to the juicy fruit when it hangs on the tree. Their arms, that sounds coarse, but those which hang about the waist in an embrace) to it, and color of many take to this elementary medicine. In saying this I have reference to those who have an affinity either by the law of contemporaneity or love.

I like to see children kiss each other for some reason or no reason nor even parents do it. They are genuine and have some value in them. Although they have not the experience of those grown up lovers, they are fine-tasted in every respect, unless they get gutta-percha when they are ripe. It should be taught to no one how they shall kiss, but leave it to have its own way. Kissing is a thing frequently seen at all the fresh drink fruits in Philadelphia, but it is not a thing that is to be learned by precept or example. It is an original device and should be left to the original inventor. The greatest kissers I ever knew were those who had no idea that they were doing anything wonderful. Kissing is nothing a good deal like poetry. There is no making either of them.

To start the evening right there should be a touch of cinnamon. The beauty of a kiss lies in its spontaneity and its unpremeditation. It is useless to make the first one too elaborate, for it is danger in the future. Some people kiss as if they were eating a cream puff, and others as if they were eating a cocoanut. Some kiss as if they were eating a cocoanut. Some kiss as if they were eating a cocoanut. Some kiss
